

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

The invention provides plasma display panel technique that is operated with a low voltage and reduced power consumption, and exhibits high luminous efficiency and high luminance. A barrier plate comprises a metal electrode having a projection that projects partially toward the cell space side between display electrodes formed so that the display electrodes intersect with an address electrode in a plane approximately parallel to the panel plane.